We've got a SharePoint 2010 farm with multiple subsites. Each of the subsites has a page containing a web part with a Search Results web part. The results appear to be configured properly, as I can find any items that I am looking for in my search results by using the "Refine your search" box and filtering down to the "Visible to Everyone" column. However, there is a column on the list view that I don't see on any of the search results pages. This column is named "Visible to Everyone". I'm not sure why this column is in the search results view, but not on the list view. How does SharePoint know what to display in the "Visible to Everyone" column for each result? Is this the result of a crawl or is there another way to populate this field? A: SharePoint search is powered by SQL Server. You can look at SQL Server's tables to see what it is looking for. 4bc0debe42
